AUTO DRIVERS PAY LITTLE ATTENTION TO CITY ORDINANCE

Park Cars In Front Of
Fire Houses and Break
Law In Many Ways In Addition To Speeding.

LOOK FOR SIGNS

Automobile drivers generally in this neck of the woods pay little or no attention to State law or Borough traffic regulations and the police are called upon daily to "interview" drivers for infractions of the law. One of the most frequent of the minor lapses of these fellows who do not care a Tinker's dam for the rights of anybody else is the parking of cars within the fire zones at the hose house on Market street and the different fire plugs about the town. The place where the fire plug is "covered up" is at the private alley at Schmitt's bakery. A derelict motorist is picked up there daily.

This morning a fellow from the Morgan Run country drove into town, parked his "boat" squarely across the entrance to the fire house and let 'er sit there for an hour or two. He was hot about it, too, when he returned to his car and found the customary notice to appear at the Mayor's office to settle.

Last evening about 10:30 an out-of-town driver in wheeling down Second street bumped into the rear fender of R. K. Clees' car which was setting in front of Jordan's Cafe. The car which did the bumping was of ancient vintage and developed serious lung trouble while the driver was attempting to make his getaway down Second street. A couple of fellows who witnessed the affair set sail on foot after the offending machine and ran the wheezy old thing down before it reached Pine street. The boys got hold of the rear of the car and despite the fact that the driver "threw 'er wide open" managed to hold machine and driver in captivity until Acting Chief of Police McMullen made the grade and placed the driver under arrest.

The fellow who gave his name as Bowles and his residence as Bradford appeared before Mayor Kitchberger this morning paid $12 fine and $31.50 for the damages to the Clees car and again got his ancient bus under way and wheeled sadly out of town.

Earl "Paddy" McCabe, alleged leader of the gang was sentenced to not less than ten or more than twenty years. McCabe broke down and wept bitterly when sentence was pronounced.

HEARST FOR PRESIDENT TODAY'S CRY

New York, June 9.—A national movement to make William Randolph Hearst President of the United States after his election as Governor of New York State was announced by William J. Connors, director of the Hearst boom, after his return from a trip through the West. He said the people would demand the publisher for President in 1924, that Hearst is the biggest man in the country, that he is presidential timber, that he has the Roosevelt "punch." Moreover, he contended, Mr. Hearst is the housewife's friend. He said the women's vote would play a big part in the coming election and he has been busy organizing them for Hearst.

Mother Of Doomed Son Frantically Beats Cell Doors And Prison Wall

New York, N. Y., June 9.—Her fists raw and bleeding as the result of beating on the doors and walls of Sing Sing prison and with a voice scarcely audible from calling out her request that the New York State authorities will spare the life of New York State's youngest murderer, the mother of Ernest Tumbarello, aged 18, today worked frantically to make the tempo any stay of sentence permanent and laid siege to the gate behind which her son was imprisoned. Mrs. Tumbarello pounded and yelled until the prison official's sent the Chaplain to quiet her. Shortly after the young man was to begin the death march a stay of two weeks was granted by Governor Miller.

GHOUGHPTHEIGHTTEEAU

No, this is not the name of that animal they are hunting for in Patagonia. It is merely the word spelled in the English according to the following system:

gh for P as in the final letters of Hitchough.
ough for O as in Dough
pth for T as in Pthisis.
eight for A as in Neighbor
tte for T as in Gazette
eau for O as in Beau
Result: P-O-T-A-T-O.

It is said that J D N Z are the only letters in the English language that are not silent in some word or other. The following paragraphs may be and editorial indiscretion, but we just can't keep from speaking up once in a while.

There are those who say the English language is eventually going to be the universal language for all people of the world. If this is true it is not all the more reason that the present users of the English language should make some effort to simplify its spelling before they pass it on to the rest of the world.

If we are going to give the world something, let's give it in the best shape and form.—The Rotarian.

M'GEES YOUTH SHOT BY CHICKEN THIEF THURSDAY NIGHT

Kelsey Campbell Shot

Prowler About Coup.

WOUND NOT BAD

Kelsey Campbell, 17 year old son of Frank Campbell, of McGees, was shot through the left arm while endeavoring to apprehend a chicken thief Thursday night. His assailant escaped but an arrest in the case is expected today.

The young man, who has been staying with his grandfather T. J. Campbell of McGees, at about 11:30 o'clock last night, heard a commotion in the chicken house on the rear of the lot. Suspecting chicken thieves he secured a shotgun and hurried to the chicken house. Just as he swung the door a shot rang out and he felt a searing pain in his left shoulder. A second later a form sprang out of the darkness and bowled him over. From a prostrate position the youth fired twice but it is not believed either "hot took effect."

The wound in the fleshy part of the upper left arm, near the shoulder is not believed to be serious. The location of the wound would make it appear that the chicken thief had shot to kill. Young Campbell got a good look at his assailant and is confident that he can readily identify him. An arrest in the case is expected.

The girl first told the police that Sorisinski shot himself but later confessed that she shot him in the back after he whipped her for asking for a piece of meat at the supper table.

APPEAL TO HARDING TO STAY WAGE CUT PENDING INQUIRY

Cincinnati, Ohio, June 9.—Drafting of an appeal to President Harding to prevent the $109,000,000 wage cut recently ordered by the United States Rail Labor Board was begun today by a special committee representing 1,200,000 shop and maintenance of way employees. The appeal will ask the administration to "suspend the wage reduction, until we have an opportunity to prove to you and to the Labor Board the inequity and disastrous effect they will have upon workers." It is understood this is to be the gist of the appeal. A week will be required in this preparation. R. M. Jewell, head of the Labor department of the American Federation of Labor and today, Jewell said the wage reductions would put the shopcraft and maintenance of way employees in a starvation basis.

More To Be Cut
Chicago, Ill., June 9.—Another wage cut affecting 750,000 men is being prepared by the U. S. Labor Board. It became known here today. The reduction expected to be announced next week comes in the face of strike threats of workers from whose pay $119,000,000 annually has been cut. The latest decision of the board will affect clerks, signal men, marine department employees and stationary firemen. The amount of the decrease was not divulged.

RADIO REGULATION BILL INTRODUCED IN HOUSE TODAY

OLD FASHIONED

BARN RAISING
About sixty Bradford township farmer neighbors met at the Pleasant Valley Orchard farm Thursday and assisted farmer and orchardist H. B. Powell "raise" his new barn to replace the structure recently destroyed by fire.

It was an old fashioned community gathering so prevalent during pioneer days when neighbors were "all in a hury." The barn was raised in jig time, an ancient fiddler furnishing music for the jig. Out of deference to the times and the Eighteenth Amendment, the "little brown jug" of the early day gave place to a punch bowl containing a fine brand of "barfooted" orange crush punch. The term "barfooted" was applied to it by one of the barn raisers to denote its inability to "kick."

Chester E. Hutchinson of William street, leaves today for New York on a combined business and pleasure trip.

FISH HOGS, GIGGING ON TROUT RUN, ARE SEEN LAST NIGHT

No Less Than 8 In Gang
Seen By Bob Gray and
Bill Turner, Who Can
Identify "Hogs."

MUST BE STOPPED

Bob Gray and Bill Turner were out on Trout Run last evening trying to inveigle a trout or two into making contact with their hooks. While whipping the stream near the "swinging bridge" between Shirey's and the mouth of Crooked Run they saw a huge light apparently coming down the run.

Stepping back into the bushes the fisherman waited to see what was doing and soon beheld a gang of no less than eight "fish pirates" coming down the run armed with gigs or fish spears and gigging or spearing every fish they could see feeding on the riffles. A big husky guy in the outfit was bearing on his shoulder a torch composed of a bundle of pitch pine faggots wired together, which made a powerful light and served to blind or startle the fish into waiting motionless until a well directed spear landed on it.

When the trout fishermen stepped out into view as the line of men which extended from bank to bank and allowed nothing to escape, the light bearer doused his torch into the water and making a break for the brush along either shore, the "fish hogs" were soon crashing through the underbrush making their getaway.

It is just such "hogs" and law violators that are responsible for the rapid depletion of our streams, and shows the necessity from prompt action to enforce the fish laws in the interest of common decency in such matters.

Arrests should and no doubt will follow in this matter as several of the gang in the lineup were recognized and can be identified by the two fishermen who interrupted their law-breaking this time.

No wonder the trout are getting scarce in our streams.

New York, N. Y., June 9.—Time hangs heavy on the hands of Izzy Einstein and Moe Smith, famous dry enforcement agents of this city. Va., families, while the two soldiers who said they were deserters from the army are privates Michael McCloud and Albert Mucci, from the Edgewater Arsenal. The prisoners told a story that would stir the blood of all the would-be desperadoes in the country, outlining some of their many experiences. They said they left Clarksburg on May 31st in a powerful touring car belonging to the City Tax Collector and by chance picked up the two army men who told them they were deserters from the Arsenal.

ONE WEEK LATER

I answered it—Father's letter. I mean—yesterday, and it's gone now. But I had an awful time over it. I just didn't know what in the world to say. I'd start out all right, and I'd think I was going to get along beautifully. Then, all of a sudden, it would come over me, what I was doing—writing a letter to my father! And I could imagine just how he'd look when he got it, all stern and dignified, sitting in his chair with his paper-cutter, and I'd imagine his eyes looking down and reading what I wrote. And when I thought of that, my pen just wouldn't go. The idea of my writing anything my father would want to read!

And so I'd try to think of things that I could write—big things—big things that would interest big men: About the President and our country—its of- fices, and the state of the weather and the crops. And so I'd begin:

"Dear Father: I take my pen in hand to inform you that—"

Then I'd stop and think and think, and chew my pen-handle. Then I'd put down something. But it was awful, and I knew it was awful. So I'd have to tear it up and begin again.

Three times I did that; then I began to cry. It did seem as if I never could write that letter. Once I thought of asking Mother what to say, and getting her to help me. Then I remembered how she cried and took on and said things when the letter came, and talked about how dreadful and unnatural it all was and how she was jealous for fear I'd love Father better than I did her. And I was afraid she'd do it again, and so I didn't like to ask her. And so I didn't do it.

Then, after a time, I got out his letter and read it again. And all of a sudden I felt all warm and happy, just as I did when I first got it; and some way I was back with him in the observatory and he was telling me all about the stars. And I forgot all about being afraid of him. And I just remembered that he'd asked me to tell him what I did on Christmas day, and I knew right off that that would be easy. Why, just the easiest thing in the world! And so I got out a fresh sheet of paper and dipped my pen in the ink and began again.

And this time I didn't have a bit of trouble. I told him all about the tree I had Christmas eve, and the presents; and the little colored lights, and the fun we had singing and playing games. And then how, on Christmas morning, there was a lovely new snow on the ground, and Mr. Easterbrook came with a perfectly lovely sleigh and two horses to take Mother and me to ride, and what a splendid time we had, and how lovely Mother looked with her red cheeks and bright eyes, and how, when we got home, Mr. Easterbrook said we looked more like sisters than mother and daughter, and wasn't that nice of him? Of course I told a little more about Mr. Easterbrook, too, so Father'd know who he was—a new friend of Mother's that I'd never known till I came back this time, and how he was very rich and a most estimable man. That Aunt Hattie said so.

Then I told him that in the afternoon another gentleman came and took us to a perfectly beautiful concert. And I finished up by telling about the Christmas party in the evening, and how lovely the house looked, and Mother, and that they said I looked nice, too.

And that was all. And when I had got it done, I saw that I had written a long letter, a great long letter. And I was almost afraid it was too long, till I remembered that Father had asked me for it; he had asked me to tell him all about what I did on Christmas day.

So I sent it off.

MARCH

Yes, I know it's been quite a while, but there hasn't been a thing to say—nothing new or exciting. I mean There's just school, and the usual things, only Mr. Easterbrook doesn't come any more. (Of course, the violinist hasn't come since that day he proposed.) I don't know whether Mr. Easterbrook proposed or not. I only know that all of a sudden he stopped coming. I don't know the reason.

I don't overhear so much as I used to, anyway. Not but that I'm in the library window seat just the same; but 'most everybody that comes in looks there right off; and, of course, when they see me they don't hardly ever go on with what they are saying. So it just naturally follows that I don't overhear things as I used to.

Not that there's much to hear, though. Really, there just isn't anything going on, and things aren't half so lively as they used to be when Mr. Easterbrook was here, and all the rest. They've all stopped coming, now, 'most. I've about given up ever having a love story of Mother's to put in.

And mine, too. Here I am fifteen next month, going on sixteen (Why, that brook and river met long ago!) But Mother is getting to be almost as bad as Aunt Jane was about my receiving proper attentions from young men. Oh, she lets me go to places, a little, with the boys at school, but I always have to be chaperoned. And whenever they are going to have a chance to say anything really thrilling with Mother or Aunt Hattie right at my elbow? Echo answers never! So I've about given up that's amounting to anything, either.

Of course, there's Father left, and of course, when I go back to Andersonville this summer, there may be something doing there. But I doubt it. I forgot to say I haven't heard from Father again. I answered his Christmas letter, as I said, and wrote just as nice as I knew how and told him all he asked me to. But he never answered, nor wrote again. I am disappointed, I'll own up. I thought he would write. I think Mother did too. She's asked me ever so many times if I hadn't heard from him again. And she always looks so sort of funny when I say no—sort of glad and sorry together, all in one.

But, then, Mother's queer in lots of ways now. For instance. One week ago she gave me a perfectly lovely box of chocolates—a whole two pound box all at once, and I've never had more than a half pound at once before. But just as I was thinking how for once I was going to have a real feast, and all I wanted to eat—what do you think she told me? She said I could have three pieces, and only three pieces a day, and not one little tiny one more. And when I asked her why she gave me such a big box for, then, if that was all I could have, she said it was to teach me self discipline. That self-discipline was one of the most wonderful things in the world. That if she'd only been taught it when she was a girl, her life would have been very, very different. And so she was giving me a great big box of chocolates for my very own, just so as to teach me to deny myself and take only three pieces every day.

Three pieces!—and all that whole big box of them just making my mouth water all the while, and all just to teach me that horrid old self discipline! Why, you'd think it was Aunt Jane doing it instead of Mother!

ONE WEEK LATER

It's come—Father's letter. It came last night. Oh, it was short, and it didn't say anything about what I wrote. But I was proud of it, just the same. I just guess I was! He didn't get Aunt Jane to write to Mother, as he did before. And then, besides, he must have forgotten his stars—for he remembered about the school, and that I couldn't go there in Andersonville, and so he said I had better stay here till it finished.

And I was so glad to stay! It made me very happy—that letter. It made Mother happy, too. She liked it, and she thought it was very kind of Father to be willing to give me up almost three whole months of his life, so I could go to school here. And she said so. She said once to Aunt Hattie that she was almost tempted to write and thank him. But Aunt Hattie said, "Pooh," and it was no more than he ought to do, and that she wouldn't be seen writing to a man who so carefully avoided writing to her. So Mother didn't do it, I guess.

But I wrote. I had to write three letters, though, before I got one that Mother said would do to send. The first one sounded so good, I was staying that Mother said she was afraid he would feel hurt, and that would be too bad—when he'd been so kind. And the second one sounded as if I was so sorry not to go to Andersonville the first of April that Mother said that would never do in the world. He'd think I didn't want to stay in Boston. But the third letter I managed to make just glad enough to stay, and just sorry enough not to go. So that Mother said it was all right. And I sent it.

APRIL

Well, the last chocolate drop went yesterday. There were just seventy-six pieces in that two pound box. I counted them that first day. Of course, they were fine and dandy, and I just loved them, but the trouble is, for the last week I've been eating such snippy little pieces. You see, every day without thinking, I'd just naturally pick out the biggest pieces. So you can imagine what they got down to toward the last—mostly chocolate almonds.

As for the self discipline—I don't see as I feel any more disciplined than I did before, and I know I want chocolates just as much as ever. And I said so to Mother.

But Mother is queer. Honestly she is. And I can't help wondering—is she getting to be like Aunt Jane?

Now, listen to this: Last week I had to have a new party dress, and we found a perfect dangle of a pink silk all gold beads and gold slippers to match. And I knew I'd look perfectly divine in it, and once Mother would have got it for me. But not this time. She got a horrid white muslin with dots in it, and blue silk, each suitable for a child—for any child!

Of course, I was disappointed and I suppose I did show it—some. In fact, I'm afraid I showed it a whole lot. Mother didn't say anything then; but on the way home in the car she put her arm around me and said:

"I'm sorry about the pink dress, dear. I knew you wanted it. But it was not suitable at all for you—not until you're older. Dear Mother will have to look out that her little daughter isn't getting to be vain, and too fond of dress."

I knew then, of course, that it was just some more of that self discipline business.

But Mother never used to say anything about self-discipline. Is she getting to be like Aunt Jane?

ONE WEEK LATER

She is.

I know she is now. I'm learning to cook—to cook! And it's Mother that says I must. She told Aunt Hattie—I heard her—that she thought every girl should know how to cook and keep house, and that if she had learned those things when she was a girl, her life would have been quite different, she was sure.

I am learning at a domestic science school, and Mother is going with me. I didn't mind so much when she said she'd go, too. And, really, it is quite a lot of fun—really it is. But it is queer—Mother and I going to school together to learn how to make bread and cake and boil potatoes! And of course, Aunt Hattie laughs at us. But I don't mind. And Mother doesn't either. But, oh, how Aunt Jane would love it, if she only knew!

What do you suppose I am learning now? You'd never guess. Stars, yes, stars! And that is for Father, too. Mother came into my room one day with a book of Grandfather's under her arm. She said it was a very wonderful work on astronomy, and she was sure I would find it interesting. She said she was going to read it aloud to me an hour a day. And then, when I got to Andersonville and Father talked to me, I'd know something. And he'd be pleased.

She said she thought we owed it to Father, after he'd been so good and kind as to let me stay here almost three whole months of his life, so I could keep on with my school. And that she was very sure this would please him and make him happy.

And so for 'most a week now Mother has read to me an hour a day out of that astronomy book. Then we talk about it. And it is interesting. Mother says it is, too. She says she wishes she'd known something about astronomy when she was a girl, that she's sure it would have made things a whole lot easier and happier all around when she married Father, for then she would have known some thing about something he was interested in. She said she couldn't help that now, of course, but she could see that I knew something about such things.

It seems so funny to hear her talk such a lot about Father as she does when before she never used to mention him—only to say how afraid she was that I would love him better than I did her, and to make me say over and over again that I didn't. And I said so one day to her—I mean, I said I thought it was funny, the way she talked now.

She colored up and bit her lip, and gave a queer little laugh. Then she grew very sober and grave, and said:

"I know, dear. Perhaps I am talking more than I used to. But, you see, I've been thinking quite a lot, and I've learned some things. I'm trying to make you forget what I said—about your loving me more than him. That wasn't right, dear. Mother was wrong. She shouldn't try to influence you against your father. He is a good man; and there are none too many good men in the world. No, no I won't say that," she broke off.

ODDS AND ENDS AND THINGS

By J. D. C.

The coldest spot in the world has been found, by comparison with which the North Pole is warmer than the Tropics.

It is the Cryogenic Laboratory of the Bureau of Mines, Department of interior, where scientists are working to liquify helium gas, purify it and make it 100 per cent efficient in the lift of giant dirigibles.

It is so much colder than any other spot in the universe that comparisons are almost impossible.

It is 515 degrees, Fahrenheit, below zero.

The known temperature near the North Pole varies from 30 to 60 degrees below zero.

Gradually we behold equal suffrage working itself out to a logical conclusion. Ex-Governor James E. Ferguson is candidate for nomination on the Democratic primary ticket as United States Senator from Texas. So is Myriam A. Ferguson, his wife.

An army of 8,549,346 women and girls is at work throughout the United States helping carry on the nation's industry and commerce, according to the count of the Census Bureau.

The army is making recruits every day, according to Miss Mary Anderson, head of the Woman's Bureau of the Department of Labor. This is despite the fact, according to Miss Anderson, that women are not "amply paid."

"Women are obliged," explained Miss Anderson, "to accept 75 cents for each dollar paid the male workers for the same task."

"I've heard tell of these people in the cities who claim there ought to be a law against having all the kids you want," Baker, world champion papa declared.

"If a man's got a good herd of cows and a house, there's no sense in limiting the number of kids he can have," Baker is the milk man of Harlan, Ky.

Baker continued: "No, I can't say when it's best to have your first child. But don't wait until you are certain you're able to support it." Have the

How to Make and Use It

VI. TOOLS AND SUPPLIES REQUIRED

To give an entire or complete list of the various tools and supplies required for making, setting up and using wireless telephones is practically impossible. In the first place, some people can work advantageously with fewer tools than others; some people are naturally "handy" or inventive and can find uses for odds and ends which would appear worthless to others; some people must economize on tools and supplies, others can spend an unlimited amount, while still others prefer to purchase most of their appliances ready-made and merely put them together or set them up.

For these reasons, the tools and supplies listed below are only those which will prove most necessary and as their quality, size and number will depend largely upon the work to be done and one's pocketbook, no prices or estimates of their cost have been given.

TOOLS

One large screwdriver.
One bradawl set of bits, screwdrivers, etc., or small and medium sized screwdrivers.
One wire-cutting pliers.
One hack saw frame and saw.
Panel or crosscut saw.
Mitre saw and mitre box.
Chisels and gouges.
Three-cornered file.
Round or rat-tail file.
Flat file.
Sandpaper.
Smoothing or block-plane.
Small bench (iron) vise.
Bit-stock with bits and augers.
Brest or hand, geared drill with twist drills.
Flat-nosed pliers.
Round-nosed pliers.
Cutting pliers (flat-nosed and cutting pliers combined may be used).
Soldering iron, solder and flux.
Crank hammer.
Clew hammer.
Carpenter's square.
Tape, yard stick or rule.
Set of small screw-taps and dies.
Compasses or dividers.

SUPPLIES

Wire nails.
Wood screws (flat head), assorted steel or brass.
Wood screws (round head), assorted brass.
Washers for round-head screws.
Small brass bolts and nuts, assorted.
Heavy paper.
Wire of various sizes (see directions), copper, plain or bare.
Same insulated (see directions).
Stiff cardboard.
Paraffine wax.
Good glue.
Sealing wax.
White shellac.
Fiber board or bakelite.
Hard rubber knobs.
Flexible insulated wire cord.
Porcelain insulators.
Tin foil.
Binding posts.
Tarnishless.
Varnished cambric tubing.
Strong twine or string.
Sheet brass or brass strips (see directions).
Sheet copper.
Adhesive tape.

The last is one of the most useful articles one can have. It is useful in wrapping joints of wires; in covering wires as an insulator; in attaching wires where they cannot be soldered; in making temporary joints or connections; in covering coils or holding the wires in place; in holding parts of cases or boxes together while they are being glued or nailed; to cover a cut in your finger, as well as for a thousand and one other purposes. But do not use the cheap, weak grades of tape sold in ten-cent stores and by many bicycle and automobile accessory dealers. Use a good, strong, rubber-covered tape such as Tero, for while it costs more it is worth many times as much more. The cheap tapes dry up, lose their stickiness upon exposure to air; the thin rubber, if any, soon disappears and leaves only the fabric which is not an insulator; they have no tensile strength, whereas high-grade tapes are exceedingly strong, they are coated heavily with rubber, they never dry up and they retain their tenacity for a long time.

Varnished cambric tubing, known also as "Spaghetti," is the best material for covering joints in wires and should be used wherever possible.

Finally, let me advise you never to throw away anything which you have on hand in the way of electrical supplies, wires, screws, nails, etc. One never knows when such things may come in handy and may be put to some good and useful purpose, thus saving time and money.

YOUR TOWN AND YOU

Your town boosts you. Why not do as well by the town as it does to you? No citizen is so powerful, none so humble, but what the town is an aid to him in some way or other.

The food that he eats, the clothes he wears, the recreation that he enjoys, all originate in the town, because the money with which they are procured is made there.

When a fellow boosts his own town he does not stop there. He is performing an act that improves his own condition, for every good word and every good deed has its elevating influence.

A few people are always home town boosters. They accomplish much in the way of community betterment, and this improves the condition of not only themselves, but also of those who do no boosting at all.

If every citizen would constitute himself a home town booster the result collectively would be many times as great, and opportunities for self improvement would be more numerous.

Think it over in your odd moments. Then get into the boost wagon and hit the pace.

Many community social customs venerable with age are better forgotten, but now and then we re-discover one that deserves to live. One of these last and one that should head the list of those having a long honorable record is the old time barn raising. On such an occasion the whole community gets together. The feeling of good fellowship runs high, being heightened by the realization in everyone present that he is doing a good turn for a neighbor. A good dinner furnished by the owner of the barn and served by the ladies of the neighborhood is always an important factor in the enjoyment.

The raising of the barn of the Pleasant Valley Orchard yesterday, 8th inst., was a case in point. The work was under the supervision of builder Curtin F. Graham and Superintendent of the orchard, Joseph F. Thompson. When such managers are assisted by experienced, capable men like A. B. Lansberry, J. G. Maines, A. E. Welker, Arthur Derminer, C. E. Lansberry, Thomas Irwin, J. M. McDowell, D. O. Wilson, Fred Wilson, A. H. Wilson, James C. Mullen, Lloyd Hoover, Aaron Murray, Ernest Woolridge, Boyd Woolridge, Calvin Shirey, Harry Lumadue, G. W. Jury and a host of others like them, there is sure to be something doing and that is just what happened at Pleasant Valley yesterday. At 4 P. M. the barn was up ready for the sheeting boards and with nearly all the siding on. Long live the old-fashioned Barn-Raising.

Current Business Conditions

By GEORGE E. ROBERTS

(From the Monthly Bulletin for June Issued by The National City Bank of New York)

The general business situation has continued favorable from month to month until confidence is now well established that the worst of the inevitable post-war depression is over.

The most potent factor in the revival has been the exhaustion of stocks, the wearing out of things in use, bringing consumers to the necessity of coming into the markets to supply their own wants and of selling what they might have to provide the means of purchase.

The pressure of reciprocal wants gradually brings all branches of industry to the readjustments that have to be made.

In the case of foodstuffs and the leading raw materials of industry there are no large supplies being carried over, unless we except corn, which does not enter readily into consumption until it has been converted into meat. The grains chiefly used for bread are closely raised up, the world depending upon full crops each year. In the chief materials of clothing, wool and cotton, the carry-over which has existed since the war has been reduced in an important degree during the past year.

These conditions give an assurance of stability in the principal agricultural staples which has not been felt since the fall of 1920.

Prosperity is the fruit of a state of ordered, balanced and reciprocal industry, in which everybody works at rendering some service to others and gets his pay in the services which they render to him. Although an appalling ignorance of mutual interests is constantly displayed, nevertheless people are bound to strive unceasingly to improve their relations with each other.

The state of ease that has developed in the money market, as evidenced by the liquidation of the Federal Reserve banks, the absorption of investing securities and the rise of the bond and stock markets, is a condition favorable to business expansion. It does not follow, however, because a substantial revival from the extreme state of completed, either in our international or our domestic relations.

The Crop Outlook. The outlook for the crops is excellent. The season was backward on account of wet weather, but the crops are growing in the ground in good shape, and with ample moisture to give them a fine start when warm weather comes. The single exception is the cotton crop, which had a poor start and is threatened by the boll weevil. Apprehension is felt of a short crop, and the price reflects it.

The improvement is not confined to this country. Foreign trade is better. The South American countries which produce raw materials and foodstuffs are finding better markets, working off the surplus stocks of merchandise which have embarrassed them, and beginning to buy again in substantial amounts. Conditions in Asia are improving. The foreign exchanges are stronger, which means a more favorable condition for foreign buyers in this market.

Railroad Rates and the Labor Situation. The Interstate Commerce Commission has ordered a ten per cent. reduction in freight rates and the Railroad Labor Board has ordered a reduction of wages for one class of railroad employees to about the same rate. Other wage reductions are expected to follow. These orders go well together and are in harmony with the general trend of the last year and a half.

There are no signs of a settlement of the coal strike which has run two months. Production of bituminous non-union mines is now about one-half the normal requirements. The situation is becoming critical in the case of anthracite as there is no surplus mine capacity from which to make up the loss of production.

With the coal miners on a strike and the railroad employees voting upon one, the situation affords a striking illustration of the weakness depression has taken place, that we shall have uninterrupted or rapid recovery to full activity in all lines. A readjustment of industrial relations is under way and has produced the improvement in sight, but complete readjustment has not been achieved of the highly organized modern industrial system, in which production is carried on by groups of people exchanging products and services. It is an effective system when all are working harmoniously. We are benefited by it, but the system is dependent upon good faith, fair dealing and a broad view of mutual interests. The work of the coal miner or railroad employee is no more essential to the welfare of society than the work of the farmer or the worker in many other industries, but the opportunity to combine is more favorable, and the chances of success for a combination are better.

The action of the miners and railroad employees in forming an alliance must be accepted as meaning a purpose to exercise their control over the mines and the railways, and is a threat of arbitrary power, inconsistent with the mutual obligations upon which society rests.

This, of course, is not saying that the miners and railroad men are an exceptionally bad lot; we know they are not; as individuals they would be as kind, considerate and helpful as the average of other people, but, as with most people, they have a bias for the interests of the group or class that they do not see the fundamental rights that underlie all others and which must be respected if orderly society is to endure. When a relatively small group claims, by reason of its relations to the industrial organization, the right to put the lives or welfare of the population in jeopardy it aspires to an exercise of power that in the long run society will not tolerate. When rights and interests come in conflict all parties are bound to have a voice in the settlements.

professional. It was packed full of laughter from start to finish. Any one seeing the enactment of the affairs of the Wheeler family and Clarence could not help but laugh. It was like standing aside and seeing yourself go by.

Tarkington's presentation of the adolescent boy and girl is extremely funny, but if the parts of Bobby and Cora Wheeler had not been so ably taken by Miss Regina Malloy and Timothy Minahan, they would not have carried over with the great success which they did. These two young people demonstrated real dramatic ability, everyone could see himself and sister or someone else's brother and sister, which speaks well for Miss Malloy's and Mr. Minahan's talent. Clarence, himself, was taken by Joseph Malloy and very well done. It isn't everyone who could preserve such a pleasant disposition with so many ladies at once. Thomas Armstrong portrayed Mr. Wheeler; if you have ever heard of Tom or seen him in a middle aged man's part, you know how splendidly he did it. Mrs. Wheeler's part was very well taken by Augusta Beahan. Miss Beahan's acting is always of the best. Miss Georgiana Murray as Miss Violet Pinney Cora's governess did justice to the part. She captured the hearts of the audience as well as the hearts of the gentlemen of the east. As a "grass widow" James Moore was a great success; he did have us fooled with his courtship of Miss Pinney. To say that those two model servants, Della and Dinwiddie, in the persons of Miss Cynthia Beahan and Clark Lippart took an active interest in the affairs of the family would be putting it mildly. To finish with there was Miss Marilyn, taken by Miss Alice Mulrooney, who was never wrong and a perfect secretary.

It would be very hard to try and pick the best actor, they were all so very good. Much credit should be given to the young people for their capable work and a large amount of it should go to Sister Marie Frances whose able coaching probably was responsible for the success of the play.

"WORKS" TRIUMPHS OVER "FAITH"

A close and interesting five inning game was played between the West Side Methodist Brotherhood team and the Presbyterians in the Senior League of the Community Service Base Ball Leagues last evening at the Driving Park. As a result of effective pitching on both sides the score was tied at two runs for each team when the Methodists came to bat in the last half of the fifth. Lerish, first man up, was hit with a pitched ball and Hoover who was next to bat lined out the longest hit of the day, which the scorer kindly counted as a home run, and figured the score as four to two. Among the casualties of the game was a black eye which Fulford received from a thrown ball, and a bruise which Fauver, who was moping received when he was not quick enough in getting out of the way of a liner which the pitcher dodged. The sharp fielding of Hunter

First Duty of the Poet.

Poets do not write for poets alone, but for men. Unless, therefore, we are advocates for that admiration which subsists upon ignorance, and that pleasure which arises from hearing what we do not understand, the poet must descend from his supposed height; and, in order to excite national sympathy, he must express himself as other men express themselves.

ARE YOU NERVOUS? RUN-DOWN?

A Young Mother Who was Nervous, Weak and Could Not Sleep, Found Health and Strength in This Prescription. Read What She Says:
Sharon, Pa.—"Before the birth of my first child I became very much run down. I was nervous, weak and could not sleep. I tried several medicines but did not get any help until I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it built me right up in health and strength. I kept well right up to the last and had a very healthy child. I also took a few bottles of the Favorite Prescription afterward and found it a great help in strengthening me. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription can be relied upon as a woman's tonic."
Mrs. C. P. Starnes, 215 Shenango St.
What "Favorite Prescription" has done for others it should do for you. Get it at the drug store, in tablets or liquid, or send 10c for trial package, to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y.

Shoes that Stand the Boy-Test

Parents, you know what boys do to shoes!—scratch 'em, scrape 'em, scuff 'em, kick 'em out. Only leather, and tough leather at that, will stand up under it!

Because of this, Endicott-Johnson are particularly careful about the tanning of "boy-shoe leather." That's why E-J Scouts for boys, have become famous for their long wear. They "stand the gaff" and they stand resoling.

Look for the E-J hide trade-mark on the soles of these sturdy shoes—specially designed for growing feet. It is your guarantee of long wear, neat appearance, and honest price.

Shakespearean Philosophy.

We defy augury: there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come; the readiness is all.—Shakespeare.

Can Be No Compromise.

It is a truism, but one often practically forgotten, that there is no medium between truth and falsehood.—Archbishop Whateley.

THE FACE IN THE MIRROR

Your face, does it wear the contented expression of good health, or are the features drawn and pallid? In the latter case, your story is read by all who see you, and what woman of spirit wants to be pitied for her physical condition? There is a way to get the nervous, tired lines out of your face and the slump out of your body. The use of that standard remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, will strengthen the nerves and tone up the system to resist that excessive fatigue.

She Was Worth Much to Him. Following the marriage ceremony the groom called the minister aside and inquired the price of the service. "Well," said the minister, "you may pay me whatever it's worth to you." "Be reasonable!" growled the groom. "This woman inherits a million dollars on her twenty-first birthday."—Call-Born's Pelican.

Cosmic Dust.

It has been only lately discovered that cosmic dust forms layers at the bottom of the deepest seas. Between Honolulu and Tahiti, at a depth of 2,350 fathoms—over two miles and a half—a vast layer of this material exists.

Seek to Bribe Ghosts.

A firm belief in ghosts prevails among the inhabitants of Central Africa. If a native believes that he is possessed of a ghost he goes to his local medicine man and asks him to expel it. One method the medicine man has of doing this is to prepare a meal, hoping that the food will tempt the ghost to leave the body of the man.

Another Big Goldwyn Feature!

Goldwyn is pushing "The Man From Lost River" as one of the prize features of a prize program.

"The Man From Lost River" is a big picture—one of those strong, two-fisted, red-blooded, out-door yarns that every picture-goer enjoys.

This sort of story has made Katharine Newlin Burt and her "The Branding Iron" famous. But "The Branding Iron" was not quite so active, not quite so swift as this new, vivid box-office production.

It is the kind of picture that made motion pictures popular. HOUSE PETERS is at his best as The Man.

AUTO DRIVERS PAY LITTLE ATTENTION TO CITY ORDINANCE

Park Cars In Front Of
Fire Houses and Break
Law In Many Ways In Addition To Speeding.

LOOK FOR SIGNS

Automobile drivers generally in this neck of the woods pay little or no attention to State law or Borough traffic regulations and the police are called upon daily to "interview" drivers for infractions of the law. One of the most frequent of the minor lapses of these fellows who do not care a Tinker's dam for the rights of anybody else is the parking of cars within the fire zones at the hose house on Market street and the different fire plugs about the town. The place where the fire plug is "covered up" is at the private alley at Schmitt's bakery. A derelict motorist is picked up there daily.

This morning a fellow from the Morgan Run country drove into town, parked his "boat" squarely across the entrance to the fire house and let 'er sit there for an hour or two. He was hot about it, too, when he returned to his car and found the customary notice to appear at the Mayor's office to settle.

Last evening about 10:30 an out-of-town driver in wheeling down Second street bumped into the rear fender of R. K. Clees' car which was setting in front of Jordan's Cafe. The car which did the bumping was of ancient vintage and developed serious lung trouble while the driver was attempting to make his getaway down Second street. A couple of fellows who witnessed the affair set sail on foot after the offending machine and ran the wheezy old thing down before it reached Pine street. The boys got hold of the rear of the car and despite the fact that the driver "threw 'er wide open" managed to hold machine and driver in captivity until Acting Chief of Police McMullen made the grade and placed the driver under arrest.

The fellow who gave his name as Bowles and his residence as Bradford appeared before Mayor Kitchberger this morning paid $12 fine and $31.50 for the damages to the Clees car and again got his ancient bus under way and wheeled sadly out of town.

NOTORIOUS M'CABE GANG DRAWS TOTAL OF 70 YEARS IN PEN

Pittsburgh, Pa., June 9.—The twelve McCabe safe-cracking and whiskey convicted members of the notorious stealing gang were sentenced to a total of seventy years in the penitentiary today, although the highest individual maximum sentences were for twelve years. Earl "Paddy" McCabe, alleged leader of the gang was sentenced to not less than ten or more than twenty years. McCabe broke down and wept bitterly when sentence was pronounced.

HEARST FOR PRESIDENT TODAY'S CRY

New York, June 9.—A national movement to make William Randolph Hearst President of the United States after his election as Governor of New York State was announced by William J. Connors, director of the Hearst boom, after his return from a trip through the West. He said the people would demand the publisher for President in 1924, that Hearst is the biggest man in the country, that he is presidential timber, that he has the Roosevelt "punch." Moreover, he contended, Mr. Hearst is the housewife's friend. He said the women's vote would play a big part in the coming election and he has been busy organizing them for Hearst.

Mother Of Doomed Son Frantically Beats Cell Doors And Prison Wall

New York, N. Y., June 9.—Her fists raw and bleeding as the result of beating on the doors and walls of Sing Sing prison and with a voice scarcely audible from calling out her request that the New York State authorities will spare the life of New York State's youngest murderer, the mother of Ernest Tumbarello, aged 18, today worked frantically to make the tempo any stay of sentence permanent and laid siege to the gate behind which her son was imprisoned. Mrs. Tumbarello pounded and yelled until the prison official's sent the Chaplain to quiet her. Shortly after the young man was to begin the death march a stay of two weeks was granted by Governor Miller.

GHOUGHPTHEIGHTTEEAU

No, this is not the name of that animal they are hunting for in Patagonia. It is merely the word spelled in the English according to the following system:

gh for P as in the final letters of Hitchough.
ough for O as in Dough
pth for T as in Pthisis.
eight for A as in Neighbor
tte for T as in Gazette
eau for O as in Beau
Result: P-O-T-A-T-O.

It is said that J D N Z are the only letters in the English language that are not silent in some word or other. The following paragraphs may be and editorial indiscretion, but we just can't keep from speaking up once in a while.

There are those who say the English language is eventually going to be the universal language for all people of the world. If this is true it is not all the more reason that the present users of the English language should make some effort to simplify its spelling before they pass it on to the rest of the world.

If we are going to give the world something, let's give it in the best shape and form.—The Rotarian.

Rail Leaders in Fight on Wage Cuts

M'GEES YOUTH SHOT BY CHICKEN THIEF THURSDAY NIGHT

Kelsey Campbell Shot
Thru Left Arm When He Tries To Recognize
Prowler About Coup.

WOUND NOT BAD

Kelsey Campbell, 17 year old son of Frank Campbell, of McGees, was shot through the left arm while endeavoring to apprehend a chicken thief Thursday night. His assailant escaped but an arrest in the case is expected today.

The young man, who has been staying with his grandfather T. J. Campbell of McGees, at about 11:30 o'clock last night, heard a commotion in the chicken house on the rear of the lot. Suspecting chicken thieves he secured a shotgun and hurried to the chicken house. Just as he swung the door a shot rang out and he felt a searing pain in his left shoulder. A second later a form sprang out of the darkness and bowled him over. From a prostrate position the youth fired twice but it is not believed either shot took effect.

The wound in the fleshy part of the upper left arm, near the shoulder is not believed to be serious. The location of the wound would make it appear that the chicken thief had shot to kill. Young Campbell got a good look at his assailant and is confident that he can readily identify him. An arrest in the case is expected.

GIRL, 12, KILLS FATHER WHO BEAT HER AND MOTHER

Washington, Pa., June 9.—Enraged because she and her mother were subjected to many beatings, Mary Sorisinski, aged 12, shot and killed her father while he was standing in the yard of their home at Marianna, near here, according to police. The girl is being held here pending an investigation of her story. The girl first told the police that Sorisinski shot himself but later confessed that she shot him in the back after he whipped her for asking for a piece of meat at the supper table.

APPEAL TO HARDING TO STAY WAGE CUT PENDING INQUIRY

Cincinnati, Ohio, June 9.—Drafting of an appeal to President Harding to prevent the $109,000,000 wage cut recently ordered by the United States Rail Labor Board was begun today by a special committee representing 1,200,000 shop and maintenance of way employees. The appeal will ask the administration to "suspend the wage reduction until we have an opportunity to prove to you and to the Labor Board the injury and disastrous effect they will have upon workers." It is understood this is to be the gist of the appeal. A week will be required in this preparation. R. M. Jewell, head of the Labor department of the American Federation of Labor and today, Jewell said the wage reductions would put the shopcraft and maintenance of way employees in a starvation basis.

More To Be Cut
Chicago, Ill., June 9.—Another wage cut affecting 750,000 men is being prepared by the U. S. Labor Board. It became known here today. The reduction expected to be announced next week comes in the face of strike threats of workers from whose pay $119,000,000 annually has been cut. The latest decision of the board will affect clerks, signal men, marine department employees and stationary firemen. The amount of the decrease was not divulged.

RADIO REGULATION BILL INTRODUCED IN HOUSE TODAY

Washington, D. C., June 9.—Complete governmental regulation of the radio is provided in a bill introduced in the House today by Representative Light, of Maine. The bill carries out the recommendations of the recent radio conference called by Secretary Hoover at the instance of President Harding.

OLD FASHIONED

BARN RAISING
About sixty Bradford township farmer neighbors met at the Pleasant Valley Orchard farm Thursday and assisted farmer and orchardist H. B. Powell "raise" his new barn to replace the structure recently destroyed by fire.

It was an old fashioned community gathering so prevalent during pioneer days when neighbors were "all in a hury." The barn was raised in jig time, an ancient fiddler furnishing music for the jig. Out of deference to the times and the Eighteenth Amendment, the "little brown jug" of the early day gave place to a punch bowl containing a fine brand of "barfooted" orange crush punch. The term "barfooted" was applied to it by one of the barn raisers to denote its inability to "kick."

APPOINTED CHIEF INSPECTOR OF ROADS

H. A. Giles, of Mount Jay, former Supervisor of Lawrence township, who has been engaged in State road work for the past several years, has been promoted to Chief Inspector of State Roads for Clearfield county. Mr. Giles is a capable road man and should prove to be the right man for the place.

Chester E. Hutchinson of William street, leaves today for New York on a combined business and pleasure trip.

FISH HOGS, GIGGING ON TROUT RUN, ARE SEEN LAST NIGHT

No Less Than 8 In Gang
Seen By Bob Gray and
Bill Turner, Who Can
Identify "Hogs."

MUST BE STOPPED

Bob Gray and Bill Turner were out on Trout Run last evening trying to inveigle a trout or two into making contact with their hooks. While whipping the stream near the "swinging bridge" between Shirey's and the mouth of Crooked Run they saw a huge light apparently coming down the run.

Stepping back into the bushes the fisherman waited to see what was doing and soon beheld a gang of no less than eight "fish pirates" coming down the run armed with gigs or fish spears and gigging or spearing every fish they could see feeding on the riffles. A big husky guy in the outfit was bearing on his shoulder a torch composed of a bundle of pitch pine faggots wired together, which made a powerful light and served to blind or startle the fish into waiting motionless until a well directed spear landed on it.

When the trout fishermen stepped out into view as the line of men which extended from bank to bank and allowed nothing to escape, the light bearer doused his torch into the water and making a break for the brush along either shore, the "fish hogs" were soon crashing through the underbrush making their getaway.

It is just such "hogs" and law violators that are responsible for the rapid depletion of our streams, and shows the necessity from prompt action to enforce the fish laws in the interest of common decency in such matters.

Arrests should and no doubt will follow in this matter as several of the gang in the lineup were recognized and can be identified by the two fishermen who interrupted their law-breaking this time.

No wonder the trout are getting scarce in our streams.

PRESENT TAXATION SYSTEM CONDEMNED BY LOCAL ATTORNEY

Urges Assessment Board
Of Three For County
Which Will Be Elected
And Held Responsible.

NOW INEQUITABLE

Speaking before the Rotary Club last evening attorney J. P. O'Loughlin very ably discussed the subject of taxation at its applies to township, borough and county taxes.

Mr. O'Loughlin said that the trouble with present taxation methods is concentrated on the variation of valuations in different townships and boroughs making up the county unit and pointed out that the assessment basis in some townships is as low as 20% and in others as high as 100% and that also in one township in the county residents have their properties valued at from 25% to 50% less than non residents. He contended that it is humanly impossible to make the valuations equitably fair under the present system because of the number of assessors, there being one for each ward or township.

In wards or townships in which the valuations are 75% of the actual market value taxables pay three times as much of the cost of supporting the county as do the townships in which the valuations are 25% of the real value. The township authorities for their local purposes get sufficient taxes by increasing the local millage, but the county millage is the same all over the county and many districts are therefore not paying their share.

During Governor Spruill's term of office, he has been seeking a remedy. For nearly three years a committee has been working in seeking a remedy for this inequitable taxation plan which, as it now operates, is nothing less than a curse. There was recommended to the last legislature by this committee the setting up of a board of assessors of three persons at the county seat, they to be in control of all assessments in the county, to sit continuously on certain dates, at fixed times to hear complaints and to fix valuations. Their duty would be to put the actual value on each property. That now is the law but it is not carried out.

There is also being sought a way to require property owners to report all his or her own taxable property at the actual value as determined by the owner and also to require that all property be assessed in the name of the person who owns it. Another feature that is on the way to being worked out is the perfecting of the title that a purchaser will get under a tax sale. The title now is usually poor and its worth hard to determine without recourse to law. It is proposed that during the two years redemption period the county authorities are to give a registered mail notice to the person in whose name the property is assessed. If it is not redeemed within the two years after this notice is given then the title will be good in the purchaser.

Mr. O'Loughlin said that the principal remedy for the present neglect and unfairness in taxes is in having the power of assessments centered in as few persons as possible, they to be held responsible for the valuation and to be elected by the people who pay the taxes. If under this system the people be content with unfairness when they have a remedy they will have the consequence to suffer.

ONE WEEK LATER

I answered it—Father's letter. I mean—yesterday, and it's gone now. But I had an awful time over it. I just didn't know what in the world to say. I'd start out all right, and I'd think I was going to get along beautifully. Then, all of a sudden, it would come over me, what I was doing—writing a letter to my father! And I could imagine just how he'd look when he got it, all stern and dignified, sitting in his chair with his paper-cutter, and I'd imagine his eyes looking down and reading what I wrote. And when I thought of that, my pen just wouldn't go. The idea of my writing anything my father would want to read!

And so I'd try to think of things that I could write—big things—big things that would interest big men: About the President and our country—its of- fices, and the state of the weather and the crops. And so I'd begin:

"Dear Father: I take my pen in hand to inform you that—"

Then I'd stop and think and think, and chew my pen-handle. Then I'd put down something. But it was awful, and I knew it was awful. So I'd have to tear it up and begin again.

Three times I did that; then I began to cry. It did seem as if I never could write that letter. Once I thought of asking Mother what to say, and getting her to help me. Then I remembered how she cried and took on and said things when the letter came, and talked about how dreadful and un- natural it all was and how she was jealous of her I'd love Father better than I did her. And I was afraid she'd do it again, and so I didn't like to ask her. And so I didn't do it.

Then, after a time, I got out his letter and read it again. And all of a sudden I felt all warm and happy, just as I did when I first got it; and some way I was back with him in the observatory and he was telling me all about the stars. And I forgot all about being afraid of him. And I just remembered that he'd asked me to tell him what I did on Christmas day, and I knew right off that that would be easy. Why, just the easiest thing in the world! And so I got out a fresh sheet of paper and dipped my pen in the ink and began again.

And this time I didn't have a bit of trouble. I told him all about the tree I had Christmas eve, and the presents; and the little colored lights, and the fun we had singing and playing games. And then how, on Christ- mas morning, there was a lovely new snow on the ground, and Mr. Easterbrook came with a perfectly lovely sleigh and two horses to take Mother and me to ride, and what a splendid time we had, and how lovely Mother looked with her red cheeks and bright eyes, and how, when we got home, Mr. Easterbrook said we looked more like sisters than mother and daughter, and wasn't that nice of him. Of course I told a little more about Mr. Easterbrook, too, so Father'd know who he was—a new friend of Mother's that I'd never known till I came back this time, and how he was very rich and a most estimable man. That Aunt Hattie said so.

Then I told him that in the after- noon another gentleman came and took us to a perfectly beautiful con- cert. And I finished up by telling about the Christmas party in the evening, and how lovely the house looked, and Mother, and that they said I looked nice, too.

And that was all. And when I had got it done, I saw that I had written a long letter, a great long letter. And I was almost afraid it was too long, till I remembered that Father had asked me for it; he had asked me to tell him all about what I did on Christ- mas day.

So I sent it off.

MARCH

Yes, I know it's been quite a while, but there hasn't been a thing to say—nothing new or exciting. I mean There's just school, and the usual things, only Mr. Easterbrook doesn't come any more. (Of course, the vi- olinist hasn't come since that day he proposed.) I don't know whether Mr. Easterbrook proposed or not. I only know that all of a sudden he stopped coming. I don't know the reason.

So I Sent It Off.

I don't overhear so much as I used to, anyway. Not but that I'm in the library window seat just the same; but 'most everybody that comes in looks there right off; and, of course, when they see me they don't hardly ever go on with what they are saying. So it just naturally follows that I don't overhear things as I used to.

Not that there's much to hear, though. Really, there just isn't any- thing going on, and things aren't half so lively as they used to be when Mr. Easterbrook was here, and all the rest. They've all stopped coming, now, 'most. I've about given up ever having a love story of Mother's to put in.

And mine, too. Here I am fifteen next month, going on sixteen (Why, that brook and river met long ago!) But Mother is getting to be almost as bad as Aunt Jane was about my re- ceiving proper attentions from young men. Oh, she lets me go to places, a little, with the boys at school, but I always have to be chaperoned. And whenever they are going to have a chance to say anything really thrilling with Mother or Aunt Hattie right at my elbow? Echo answers never! So I've about given up that's amounting to anything, either.

Of course, there's Father left, and of course, when I go back to Ander- sonville this summer, there may be something doing there. But I doubt it. I forgot to say I haven't heard from Father again. I answered his Christ- mas letter, as I said, and wrote just as nice as I knew how and told him all he asked me to. But he never answered, nor wrote again. I am dis- appointed, I'll own up. I thought he would write. I think Mother did too. She's asked me ever so many times if I hadn't heard from him again. And she always looks so sort of funny when I say no—sort of glad and sorry together, all in one.

But, then, Mother's queer in lots of ways now. For instance. One week ago she gave me a perfectly lovely box of chocolates—a whole two pound box all at once, and I've never had more than a half pound at once before. But just as I was thinking how for once I was going to have a real feast, and all I wanted to eat—what do you think she told me? She said I could have three pieces, and not one little tiny one more. And when I asked her why she gave me such a big box for, then, if that was all I could have, she said it was to teach me self discipline. That self-discipline was one of the most wonderful things in the world. That if she'd only been taught it when she was a girl, her life would have been very, very different. And so she was giving me a great big box of choco- lates for my very own, just so as to teach me to deny myself and take only three pieces every day.

Three pieces!—and all that whole big box of them just making my mouth water all the while, and all just to teach me that horrid old self disci- pline! Why, you'd think it was Aunt Jane doing it instead of Mother!

ONE WEEK LATER

It's come—Father's letter. It came last night. Oh, it was short, and it didn't say anything about what I wrote. But I was proud of it, just the same. I just guess I was! He didn't get Aunt Jane to write to Mother, as he did before. And then, besides, he must have forgotten his stars—for he never thought of me a little—for he remembered about the school, and that I couldn't go there in Anderson- ville, and so he said I had better stay here till it finished.

And I was so glad to stay! It made me very happy—that letter. It made Mother happy, too. She liked it, and she thought it was very kind of Father to be willing to give me up almost three whole months of his six, so I could go to school here. And she said so. She said once to Aunt Hattie that she was almost tempted to write and thank him. But Aunt Hattie said, "Pooh," and it was no more than he ought to do, and that she wouldn't be seen writing to a man who so care- fully avoided writing to her. So Mother didn't do it, I guess.

But I wrote. I had to write three letters, though, before I got one that Mother said would do to send. The first one sounded so good, I was stay- ing that Mother said she was afraid he would feel hurt, and that would be too bad—when he'd been so kind. And the second one sounded as if I was so sorry not to go to Andersonville the first of April that Mother said that would never do in the world. He'd think I didn't want to stay in Boston. But the third letter I managed to make just glad enough to stay, and just sorry enough not to go. So that Mother said it was all right. And I sent it.

APRIL

Well, the last chocolate drop went yesterday. There were just seventy- six pieces in that two pound box. I counted them that first day. Of course, they were fine and dandy, and I just loved them, but the trouble is, for the last week I've been eating such snippy little pieces. You see, every day with- out thinking, I'd just naturally pick out the biggest pieces. So you can imagine what they got down to toward the last—mostly chocolate almonds.

As for the self discipline—I don't see as I feel any more disciplined than I did before, and I know I want choco- lates just as much as ever. And I said so to Mother.

But Mother is queer. Honestly she is. And I can't help wondering—is she getting to be like Aunt Jane?

Now, listen to this:

Last week I had to have a new party dress, and we found a perfect dangle of a pink silk all gold beads and gold slippers to match. And I knew I'd look perfectly divine in it, and once Mother would have got it for me. But not this time. She got a horrid white mus- lin with dots in it, and blue silk, each suitable for a child—for any child!

Of course, I was disappointed and I suppose I did show it—some. In fact, I'm afraid I showed it a whole lot. Mother didn't say anything then; but on the way home in the car she put her arm around me and said:

"I'm sorry about the pink dress, dear. I knew you wanted it. But it was not suitable at all for you—not until you're older. Dear Mother will have to look out that her little daugh- ter isn't getting to be vain, and too fond of dress."

I knew then, of course, that it was just some more of that self discipline business.

But Mother never used to say any- thing about self-discipline.

Is she getting to be like Aunt Jane?

ONE WEEK LATER

She is.

I know she is now. I'm learning to cook—to cook! And it's Mother that says I must. She told Aunt Hattie—I heard her—that she thought every girl should know how to cook and keep house, and that if she had learned those things when she was a girl, her life would have been quite different, she was sure.

I am learning at a domestic science school, and Mother is going with me. I didn't mind so much when she said she'd go, too. And, really, it is quite a lot of fun—really it is. But it is queer—Mother and I going to school together to learn how to make bread and cake and boil potatoes! And of course, Aunt Hattie laughs at us. But I don't mind. And Mother doesn't either. But, oh, how Aunt Jane would love it, if she only knew!

What do you suppose I am learning now? You'd never guess. Stars. Yes, stars! And that is for Father, too. Mother came into my room one day with a book of Grandfather's under her arm. She said it was a very won- derful work on astronomy, and she was sure I would find it interesting. She said she was going to read it aloud to me an hour a day. And then, when I got to Andersonville and Father talked to me, I'd know some- thing. And he'd be pleased.

She said she thought we owed it to Father, after he'd been so good and kind as to let me stay here almost three whole months of his six, so I could keep on with my school. And that she was very sure this would please him and make him happy.

And so for 'most a week now Mother has read to me an hour a day out of that astronomy book. Then we talk about it. And it is interesting. Mother says it is, too. She says she wishes she'd known something about astron- omy when she was a girl, that she's sure it would have made things a whole lot easier and happier all around when she married Father, for then she would have known some- thing about something he was inter- ested in. She said she couldn't help that now, of course, but she could see that I knew something about such things.

It seems so funny to hear her talk such a lot about Father as she does when before she never used to men- tion him—only to say how afraid she was that I would love him better than I did her, and to make me say over and over again that I didn't. And I said so one day to her—I mean, I said I thought it was funny, the way she talked now.

She colored up and bit her lip, and gave a queer little laugh. Then she grew very sober and grave, and said:

"I know, dear. Perhaps I am talk- ing more than I used to. But, you see, I've been thinking quite a lot, and I— I've learned some things. I'm trying to make you forget what I said—about your loving me more than him. That wasn't right, dear. Mother was wrong. She shouldn't try to influence you against your father. He is a good man; and there are none too many good men in the world. No, no I won't say that," she broke off.

But she'd already said it, and, of course, I knew she was thinking of the violinist. I'm no child.

She went on more after that, quite a lot more. And she said again that I must love Father and try to please him in every way, and she cried a lit- tle and talked a lot about how hard it was in my position, and that she was afraid she'd only been making it harder, through her selfishness and I must forgive her, and try to forget it. And she was sure she'd do better now. And she said that, after all, life wasn't in just being happy yourself. It was in how much happiness you could give to others.

Oh, it was lovely! And I cried, and she cried some more, and we kissed each other, and I promised. And after she went away I felt all upraised and holy, like you do when you've been to a beautiful church service with soft music and colored windows, and everybody kneeling. And I felt as if I'd never be naughty or thoughtless again. And that I'd never mind being Mary now. Why, I'd be glad to be Mary half the time, and even more— for Father.

But, alas! Listen. Would you believe it? Just that same evening Mother stopped me against laughing too loud and mak- ing too much noise playing with Les- ter; and I felt cross. I just boiled inside of me, and said I hated Mary, and that Mother was getting to be just like Aunt Jane. And yet, just that morning—

Oh, if only that hushed, staid, win- dow-soft-music feeling would last!

JUNE

Well, once more school is done, my trunk is all packed, and I'm ready to go to Andersonville. I leave tomorrow morning. But not as I left last year. Oh no. It is very very different. Why this year I'm really going as Mary.

Honestly, Mother has turned me into Mary before I go. Now, what do you think of that? And if I've got to be Mary there and Mary here, too, when can I ever be Marie? Oh, I know I said I'd be willing to be Mary half, and maybe more than half, the time. But when it comes to really being Mary out of turn extra time, that is quite another thing.

And I am Mary

How to Make and Use It

VI. TOOLS AND SUPPLIES REQUIRED

To give an entire or complete list of the various tools and supplies required for making, setting up and using wireless telephones is practically impossible. In the first place, some people can work advantageously with fewer tools than others; some people are naturally "handy" or inventive and can find uses for odds and ends which would appear worthless to others; some people must economize on tools and supplies, others can spend an unlimited amount, while still others prefer to purchase most of their appliances ready-made and merely put them together or set them up.

For these reasons, the tools and supplies listed below are only those which will prove most necessary and as their quality, size and number will depend largely upon the work to be done and one's pocketbook, no prices or estimates of their cost have been given.

TOOLS

One large screwdriver.
One bradawl set of bits, screwdrivers, etc., or small and medium sized screwdrivers.
One wire-cutting pliers.
One hack saw frame and saw.
Panel or crosscut saw.
Mitre saw and mitre box.
Chisels and gouges.
Three-cornered file.
Round or rat-tail file.
Flat file.
Sandpaper.
Smoothing or block-plane.
Small bench (iron) vise.
Bit-stock with bits and augers.

SUPPLIES

Wire nails.
Wood screws (flat head), assorted steel or brass.
Wood screws (round head), assorted brass.
Washers for round-head screws.
Small brass bolts and nuts, assorted.
Emery paper.
Wire of various sizes (see directions), copper, plain or bare.
Same insulated (see directions).
Stiff cardboard.
Paraffine wax.
Good glue.
Sealing wax.
White shellac.
Fiber board or bakelite.
Hard rubber knobs.
Flexible insulated wire cord.
Porcelain insulators.
Tin foil.
Binding posts.
Tarnishless.
Varnished cambric tubing.
Strong twine or string.
Sheet brass or brass strips (see directions).
Sheet copper.
Adhesive tape.

The last is one of the most useful articles one can have. It is useful in wrapping joints of wires; in covering wires as an insulator; in attaching wires where they cannot be soldered; in making temporary joints or connections; in covering coils or holding the wires in place; in holding parts of cases or boxes together while they are being glued or nailed; to cover a cut in your finger, as well as for a thousand and one other purposes. But do not use the cheap, weak grades of tape sold in ten-cent stores and by many bicycle and automobile accessory dealers. Use a good, strong, rubber-covered tape such as Tero, for while it costs more it is worth many times as much more. The cheap tapes dry up, lose their stickiness upon exposure to air; the thin rubber, if any, soon disappears and leaves only the fabric which is not an insulator; they have no tensile strength, whereas high-grade tapes are exceedingly strong, they are coated heavily with rubber, they never dry up and they retain their tenacity for a long time.

Varnished cambric tubing, known also as "Spaghetti," is the best material for covering joints in wires and should be used wherever possible.

Finally, let me advise you never to throw away anything which you have on hand in the way of electrical supplies, wires, screws, nails, etc. One never knows when such things may come in handy and may be put to some good and useful purpose, thus saving time and money.

YOUR TOWN AND YOU

Your town boosts you. Why not do as well by the town as it does to you? No citizen is so powerful, none so humble, but what the town is an aid to him in some way or other.

The food that he eats, the clothes he wears, the recreation that he enjoys, all originate in the town, because the money with which they are procured is made there.

When a fellow boosts his own town he does not stop there. He is performing an act that improves his own condition, for every good word and every good deed has its elevating influence.

A few people are always home town boosters. They accomplish much in the way of community betterment, and this improves the condition of not only themselves, but also of those who do no boosting at all.

If every citizen would constitute himself a home town booster the result collectively would be many times as great, and opportunities for self improvement would be more numerous.

Think it over in your odd moments. Then get into the boost wagon and hit the pace.

Many community social customs venerable with age are better forgotten, but now and then we re-discover one that deserves to live. One of these last and one that should head the list of those having a long honorable record is the old time barn raising. On such an occasion the whole community gets together. The feeling of good fellowship runs high, being heightened by the realization in everyone present that he is doing a good turn for a neighbor. A good dinner furnished by the owner of the barn and served by the ladies of the neighborhood is always an important factor in the enjoyment.

The raising of the barn of the Pleasant Valley Orchard yesterday, 8th inst., was a case in point. The work was under the supervision of builder Curtin F. Graham and Superintendent of the orchard, Joseph F. Thompson. When such managers are assisted by experienced, capable men like A. B. Lansberry, J. G. Maines, A. E. Welker, Arthur Derminer, C. E. Lansberry, Thomas Irwin, J. M. McDowell, D. O. Wilson, Fred Wilson, A. H. Wilson, James C. Mullen, Lloyd Hoover, Aaron Murray, Ernest Woolridge, Boyd Woolridge, Calvin Shirey, Harry Lumadue, G. W. Jury and a host of others like them, there is sure to be something doing and that is just what happened at Pleasant Valley yesterday. At 4 P. M. the barn was up ready for the sheeting boards and with nearly all the siding on. Long live the old-fashioned Barn-Raising.

Current Business Conditions

By GEORGE E. ROBERTS

(From the Monthly Bulletin for June Issued by The National City Bank of New York)

The general business situation has continued favorable from month to month until confidence is now well established that the worst of the inevitable post-war depression is over.

The most potent factor in the revival has been the exhaustion of stocks, the wearing out of things in use, bringing consumers to the necessity of coming into the markets to supply their own wants and of selling what they might have to provide the means of purchase.

The pressure of reciprocal wants gradually brings all branches of industry to the readjustments that have to be made.

In the case of foodstuffs and the leading raw materials of industry there are no large supplies being carried over, unless we except corn, which does not enter readily into consumption until it has been converted into meat. The grains chiefly used for bread are closely rased up, the world depending upon full crops each year. In the chief materials of clothing, wool and cotton, the carry-over which has existed since the war has been reduced in an important degree during the past year.

These conditions give an assurance of stability in the principal agricultural staples which has not been felt since the fall of 1920.

Prosperity is the fruit of a state of ordered, balanced and reciprocal industry, in which everybody works at rendering some service to others and gets his pay in the services which they render to him. Although an appalling ignorance of mutual interests is constantly displayed, nevertheless people are bound to strive unceasingly to improve their relations with each other.

The state of ease that has developed in the money market, as evidenced by the liquidation of the Federal Reserve banks, the absorption of investing securities and the rise of the bond and stock markets, is a condition favorable to business expansion. It does not follow, however, because a substantial revival from the extreme state of completed, either in our international or our domestic relations.

The Crop Outlook. The outlook for the crops is excellent. The season was backward on account of wet weather, but the crops are growing in the ground in good shape, and with ample moisture to give them a fine start when warm weather comes. The single exception is the cotton crop, which had a poor start and is threatened by the boll weevil. Apprehension is felt of a short crop, and the price reflects it.

The improvement is not confined to this country. Foreign trade is better. The South American countries which produce raw materials and foodstuffs are finding better markets, working off the surplus stocks of merchandise which have embarrassed them, and beginning to buy again in substantial amounts. Conditions in Asia are improving. The foreign exchanges are stronger, which means a more favorable condition for foreign buyers in this market.

Railroad Rates and the Labor Situation. The Interstate Commerce Commission has ordered a ten per cent. reduction in freight rates and the Railroad Labor Board has ordered a reduction of wages for one class of railroad employees to about the same rate. Other wage reductions are expected to follow. These orders go well together and are in harmony with the general trend of the last year and a half.

There are no signs of a settlement of the coal strike which has run two months. Production of bituminous non-union mines is now about one-half the normal requirements. The situation is becoming critical in the case of anthracite as there is no surplus mine capacity from which to make up the loss of production.

With the coal miners on a strike and the railroad employees voting upon one, the situation affords a striking illustration of the weakness depression has taken place, that we shall have uninterrupted or rapid recovery to full activity in all lines. A readjustment of industrial relations is under way and has produced the improvement in sight, but complete readjustment has not been achieved of the highly organized modern industrial system, in which production is carried on by groups of people exchanging products and services. It is an effective system when all are working harmoniously. We are benefited by it, but the system is dependent upon good faith, fair dealing and a broad view of mutual interests. The work of the coal miner or railroad employee is no more essential to the welfare of society than the work of the farmer or the worker in many other industries, but the opportunity to combine is more favorable, and the chances of success for a combination are better.

The action of the miners and railroad employees in forming an alliance must be accepted as meaning a purpose to exercise their control over the mines and the railways, and is a threat of arbitrary power, inconsistent with the mutual obligations upon which society rests.

This, of course, is not saying that the miners and railroad men are an exceptionally bad lot; we know they are not; as individuals they would be as kind, considerate and helpful as the average of other people, but, as with most people, they have a bias for the interests of the group or class that they do not see the fundamental rights that underlie all others and which must be respected if orderly society is to endure. When a relatively small group claims, by reason of its relations to the industrial organization, the right to put the lives or welfare of the population in jeopardy it aspires to an exercise of power that in the long run society will not tolerate. When rights and interests come in conflict all parties are bound to have a voice in the settlements.

professional. It was packed full of laughter from start to finish. Any one seeing the enactment of the affairs of the Wheeler family and Clarence could not help but laugh. It was like standing aside and seeing yourself go by.

Tarkington's presentation of the adolescent boy and girl is extremely funny, but if the parts of Bobby and Cora Wheeler had not been so ably taken by Miss Regina Malloy and Timothy Minahan, they would not have carried over with the great success which they did. These two young people demonstrated real dramatic ability, everyone could see himself and sister or someone else's brother and sister, which speaks well for Miss Malloy's and Mr. Minahan's talent. Clarence, himself, was taken by Joseph Malloy and very well done. It isn't everyone who could preserve such a pleasant disposition with so many ladies at once. Thomas Armstrong portrayed Mr. Wheeler; if you have ever heard of Tom or seen him in a middle aged man's part, you know how splendidly he did it. Mrs. Wheeler's part was very well taken by Augusta Beahan. Miss Beahan's acting is always of the best. Miss Georgiana Murray as Miss Violet Pinney Cora's governess did justice to the part. She captured the hearts of the audience as well as the hearts of the gentlemen of the east. As a "grass widow" James Moore was a great success; he did have us fooled with his courtship of Miss Pinney. To say that those two model servants, Della and Dinwiddie, in the persons of Miss Cynthia Beahan and Clark Lippart took an active interest in the affairs of the family would be putting it mildly. To finish with there was Miss Marilyn, taken by Miss Alice Mulrooney, who was never wrong and a perfect secretary.

It would be very hard to try and pick the best actor, they were all so very good. Much credit should be given to the young people for their capable work and a large amount of it should go to Sister Marie Frances whose able coaching probably was responsible for the success of the play.

"WORKS" TRIUMPHS OVER "FAITH"

A close and interesting five inning game was played between the West Side Methodist Brotherhood team and the Presbyterians in the Senior League of the Community Service Base Ball Leagues last evening at the Driving Park. As a result of effective pitching on both sides the score was tied at two runs for each team when the Methodists came to bat in the last half of the fifth. Lerish, first man up, was hit with a pitched ball and Hoover who was next to bat lined out the longest hit of the day, which the scorer kindly counted as a home run, and figured the score as four to two. Among the casualties of the game was a black eye which Fulford received from a thrown ball, and a bruise which Fauver, who was moping received when he was not quick enough in getting out of the way of a liner which the pitcher dodged. The sharp fielding of Hunter

First Duty of the Poet.

Poets do not write for poets alone, but for men. Unless, therefore, we are advocates for that admiration which subsists upon ignorance, and that pleasure which arises from hearing what we do not understand, the poet must descend from his supposed height; and, in order to excite national sympathy, he must express himself as other men express themselves.

Shoes that Stand the Boy-Test

Parents, you know what boys do to shoes!—scratch 'em, scrape 'em, scuff 'em, kick 'em out. Only leather, and tough leather at that, will stand up under it!

Because of this, Endicott-Johnson are particularly careful about the tanning of "boy-shoe leather." That's why E-J Scouts for boys, have become famous for their long wear. They "stand the gaff" and they stand resoling.

Another Big Goldwyn Feature!

Goldwyn is pushing "The Man From Lost River" as one of the prize features of a prize program.

"The Man From Lost River" is a big picture—one of those strong, two-fisted, red-blooded, out-door yarns that every picture-goer enjoys.

This sort of story has made Katharine Newlin Burt and her "The Branding Iron" famous. But "The Branding Iron" was not quite so active, not quite so swift as this new, vivid box-office production.

It is the kind of picture that made motion pictures popular. HOUSE PETERS is at his best as The Man.
